

Global Fellows Programme: Eligibility

Imperial College participants must:

- Be a current doctoral student (from any discipline, please note this programme is not open to MRes students)
- Be between 6 and 30 months into their PhD at the time the programme takes place (6 and 48 months for part-time students)
- Not have taken part in a previous Imperial College Global Fellows Programme

Successful applicants will:

- Be willing to be a good ambassador for Imperial College
- Possess awareness of the skills necessary to develop links with international collaborators
- Demonstrate enthusiasm for engaging with peers from the partner institution
- Gain the most from this specific programme and explain how in their application
- Have realistic expectations of the experience and explain their goals for the programme in their application
- Have an interest and awareness of issues affecting the theme of that particular programme and a willingness to engage with current topics in responses to developing global cities
- Be willing to share their experiences on the programme with the Imperial campus community after the programme

Applicants should explain how they meet the above criteria in their application (note applicants who have not addressed this requirement will not be offered a place on the programme). Applicants should have a keen interest in Cities of the Future and be willing to engage with topics and concerns in this area. However applicants do not have to have an in-depth background in the area.

Applicants who arrange research visits will be considered favourably in the application process however undertaking a research visit is not a compulsory requirement. Approximately 30-50% of participants stay for a 3 week research visit following an overseas Global Fellows Programme.
